State troopers, calling in to Appomattox headquarters, may now hear a feminine voice if Judy Goodrich is at the board. Judy is one of a growing number of women dispatchers serving state police installations in the Commonwealth.

Judy Is Police Dispatcher

A young lady with what is sometimes thought of as a "man's job" is Judy Goodrich, soon to celebrate her 20th birthday and marking her third month as a dispatcher at State Police headquarters, Appomattox.

Judy, with considerable talent as a horsewoman, singer, dancer and twirler, and trophies and ribbons to prove it – is trying her hand, now at learning other skills including the complexities of proper telephone procedure, call relay between patrol cars, and operation of the battery of teletype machines that keeps Appomattox in touch with law enforcement stations everywhere in the Commonwealth.

A 1968 graduate of Appomattox High, and the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. L. E. Goodrich, she completed her first years at Ferrum Jr. College, with a music career in mind. Then came summer vacation and an opening for a dispatcher.

She took on the new job August 16 and was promptly "flooded with work" (if the interviewer can get by with that pun) with the heavy rains and flooding August 19 in Nelson County from Hurricane Camille, and subsequent calls.

Judy takes turns on the three shifts served by dispatchers. She doesn't sip coffee to stay awake during late hours, preferring milk.

The same friendly smile and interest in other people which has brought Judy friendship wherever she goes and earned her the title "Miss Congeniality" in "Miss Appomattox" competition also serves her well in her new position.

But, just in case anyone should mistake friendship for lack of firmness and discipline it might be well to state that Judy, like many other of the personnel, is acquainted with the use of firearms and takes her place on the practice range, too.

Judy and her co-worker, dispatcher Elon Roach, explained Monday evening that women dispatchers are used throughout the system.

Mrs. Dennis St. John (Chris Paulette) was probably the first woman dispatcher here, and now Judy lends a feminine touch to the busy communications room. There seem to be no complaints, at all, that the rather austere set-up is now brightened by a flash of pink hair ribbon or glitter of costume jewelry. "Miss Congeniality" seemingly has found a good place to put many of her talents to good use.
